Dear Mayor McLean, Council President Nash, and Esteemed Boise Officials,

Boise's bold move just set a new national standard for inclusivity.

Bravo, good people. Bravo.

This step is long overdue and warmly welcomed here in South Florida.

Usually, my organization—Boca Raton-based Church of Satanology and Perpetual Soirée—deploys provocative stunts nationwide, famously erecting disco-ball-topped, gay pride-colored Festivus poles in a dozen state capitols. Despite our provocative name, the Church of Satanology is satirical performance art—fully secular, celebrating free expression and challenging religious favoritism and government overreach.

Your recent decision—to officially adopt the Pride flag despite Idaho's restrictive legislation—is exactly the courageous leadership we celebrate. Boise's audacity signals powerful solidarity, reaffirming your commitment to diversity and inclusion.

Now, let's take your statement even further.

We propose Boise officially adopt our donated Church of Satanology flag as its fourth city banner. Our colors symbolize religious neutrality, freedom of expression, and unwavering support for marginalized communities—perfectly echoing Boise's recent courageous stance. It's a powerful statement of solidarity supporting minority voices.

We get it—permanent adoption might feel ambitious. So, if that's initially too bold, let's talk about a ceremonial flag-raising event. Imagine Boise, already a leader in inclusivity, becoming the first U.S. city to hoist our standard—not as a protest, but as a joyful, fearless celebration of diversity and constitutional freedom.

Recently, we approached five Connecticut cities with similar requests—but none have demonstrated Boise's inspiring courage and inclusive vision.

Attached is a visual mockup of our distinctive flag. We're confident you'll find it a compelling symbol for the principles Boise already champions so boldly.

Let's discuss how we can make even more history together—I look forward to connecting soon.

Warm regards, and sincerest appreciation for your efforts.
